According to a WHO report published in 2010, globally, 285 million people suffer from visual challenges. Of these 285 million, 246 million suffer from low vision while the remaining 39 million suffers from blindness. Of the total number of visually impaired and blind people in the world, 65% and 82% respectively, are over 50 years of age. In South East Asia which includes India, over 48 thousand people per million suffer from visual impairment, while over 43 thousand per million suffer from low visibility and over only 6 thousand per million suffer from blindness.

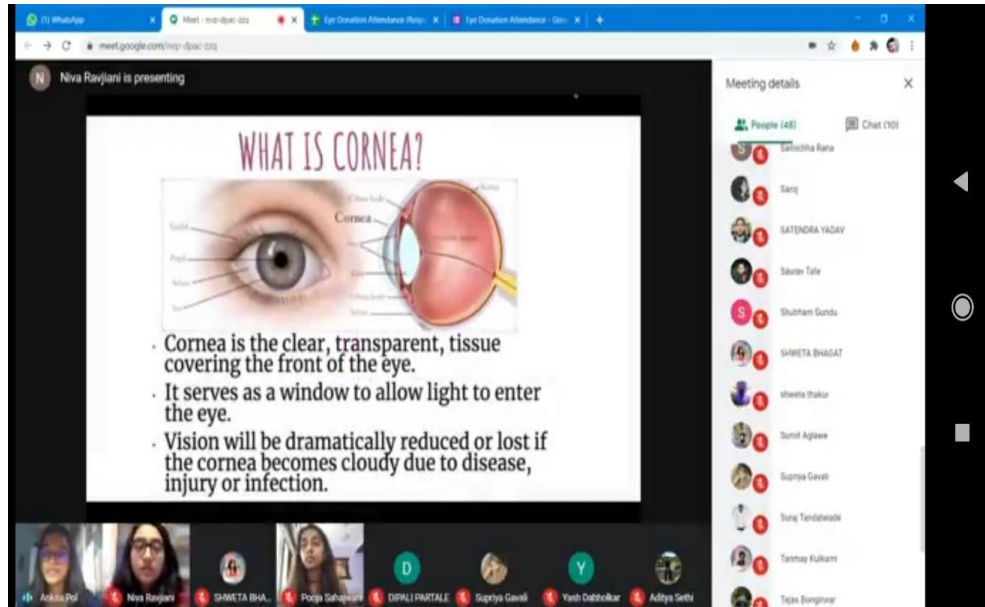

Apart from a few reasons why certain conditions cannot be cured, most people suffer from curable ailments, especially those that can be cured with the help of donated eyes. In India nearly 2- 3 million people suffer from corneal blindness which could be cured through eye donation. Cornea is a clear tissue in our eyes, which allows light to pass through, enabling the brain in comprehending shapes and colours. A person is said to be suffering from corneal blindness when the cornea gets cloudy or obstructed in some other way. This reduces visibility. Now, this can be cured with the help of eye donation, which is an act of donating eye posthumously.

The Topics Discussed In Webinar Were –

- 1) What steps can be taken to reduce the no. of orphans?
- 2) What we can do development about orphanages?
- 3) What development is lacking for orphanages?
- 4) What facilities are provided by government for orphanages?
- 5) What about the education of orphans?

A new study by an International Children’s Charity's has found that 4 per cent (20 million) of India's child population are orphans. Most of these children have been abandoned by their parents. In fact, the charity estimates that only 0.3 per cent of these orphans are children whose parents have actually died. The high proportion of abandoned children among orphans highlights the fact that poverty is a major reason behind the situation. Indeed, the study found that states such as Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and West Bengal had more orphans than India’s richer states. Generally, the country's central and eastern regions were found to be worse affected than the north and the south. Orphaned children are greatly in need of care in protection, being among the most susceptible to poverty, child labor and child trafficking.
