EDITORIAL MESSAGE

As August arrives the wave of Independence start all around. Patriotic songs and heroic tunes are played with pride.

On one hand, the MBA first year students, after their second semester examinations, were busy with their internship project, while on the other hand, fresh graduates aspire for masters and get into the process of admission.

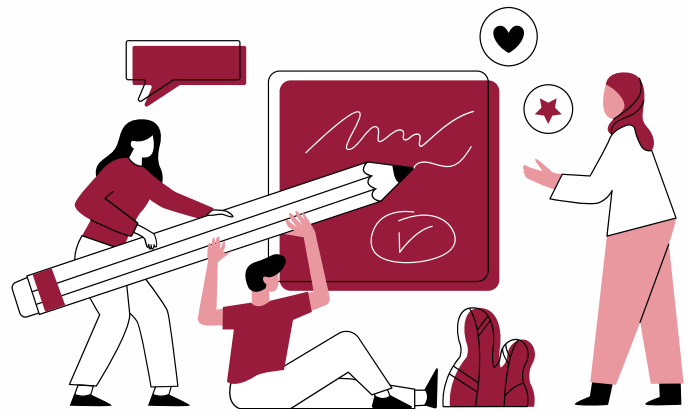

With the fresh drops of the breath-taking monsoon, the new academic session is ready to gear up, sprinkled with the freshness of new faces.

Parallel to this new beginning, the seniors were in the hustle of settling with their internship companies. They were experiencing actual work responsibilities through their internship which is the most important part of their progress as future managers. During internship the students develop insights, critical thinking and obtain practical knowledge. They get busy for two months learning the insights of the actual business world.

Additionally, I'm engaged in the onboarding process, which includes organizing candidate data and ensuring a smooth integration into the company. I'm gaining practical insights into HR tasks and how to conduct myself in a professional setting. Seniors are guiding me well, and what I learned in college is proving really useful. This internship is helping me connect what I learned in class to real-life situations, which is helping me grow personally and professionally."
